In preparation for the fall 2019 CIDA Re-Accreditation site visit, the interior design program engaged in a self-study of student learning outcomes. In the process, the program realized areas where realignment was necessary to better deliver updated accreditation standards.

First, the program identified a need for additional targeted instruction to meet specific student learning outcomes related to the representation of design ideas in both two and three-dimensional means. Faculty had been embedding discipline specific, accreditation requirements related to drafting and software instruction into lower-level design studios, however, the courses became too overloaded to produce high-quality student learning outcomes to meet the rigorous national accreditation standards.

Additionally, the program has been delivering just one history course to date ID 341 History of Interiors and Furnishings. The accreditation self-study revealed this course is overloaded, created a gap in student learning outcomes related to the study and interpretation of historical movements and their relation to modern practice in interior design. A second course is requested, ID 342 History of Interior Design II will dovetail with a modified ID 341, History of Interior Design I to more adequately and deeply explore the foundations of interior design in history and theory. Furthermore, the shift to a Bachelor of Fine Arts degree in 2015 signified an academic program steeped in history of art and design. Relying on one course to deliver the discipline-specific knowledge base necessary was inadequate. This request follows national trend with BFA degree offerings.

Last, the program is requesting a minor course modification of ID 316/316L Light and Color to ID 216/216L, to more accurately reflect the academic rigor and expectations to students.
